

@chugs_cd

Chug.Dog presents:

Chug Food - Nutrition For Strong Dogs

A small dog feeding chart

<https://chug.dog/resources/food-nutrition>

Birth to 3 months

Newborn

Newborn puppies will need milk from its mother. At about 6 or 7 weeks, you can start giving proper puppy formula. Do not give a puppy cow's milk meant for humans – they will have trouble digesting it and may experience stomach aches and vomiting.

3 to 6 months

puppy

Chug puppies weigh about 2 pounds. He doesn't need a lot of food, but since this is a critical part of bone and muscle development, make sure you give a high-nutrition formula designed for puppies. Feed him 1/3 cup of food three times a day.

6 months to 1 year

teenager

In dog years, your chug is technically a teenager and will be around 6-8 pounds. Increase his food portion to 3/4 cup, but reduce feedings to twice a day. With your vet's go-ahead, you can now shift to adult dog food or introduce some homemade dog treats.

1 year to 8 years

Adult

Your chug is now an adult (although we all know chugs will always act like puppies at heart) and should weigh around 12-14 pounds. Give 1/2 cup of food twice a day, but make sure he gets enough exercise too! Without enough walking, playtime, and other everyday activity, your dog can still gain weight despite controlled portions.

9 years and older

senior

Your chug is now a senior dog. Because of possible digestion problems, lower metabolism, and less activity, he needs fewer calories now. Give 1/3 cup twice a day.

